National Nursing Week, May 9-15, and National Nursing Day, May 12, 2022

“National Nursing Week and National Nursing Day provide excellent opportunities for British Columbians and people across the country to acknowledge and recognize the value and importance of all nurses, including registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, registered psychiatric nurses and nurse practitioners. They are the largest group of care providers in British Columbia, and they play an important part in providing care in our public health system.

“Our government values all that nurses do to protect, promote and support the safety, health and well-being of people in B.C. The past two years have been especially challenging. The COVID-19 pandemic, the toxic drug crisis and extreme weather events have called for extraordinary care, and nurses provincially have consistently answered the call, in service to all British Columbians.

“Government acknowledges the significant toll this has had on the nursing workforce. That’s why we are dedicated to actions that grow, retain and support nurses in the province. On April 19, 2022, government announced new supports for internationally educated nurses. These new supports include the consolidation of the provincially based assessment processes for internationally educated nurse candidates, approximately $9 million in bursaries to help with assessment fees and new nurse navigator positions to guide candidates through the assessment and licensing processes.

“Our government is committed to ensuring nurses have the support they need to continue to care for people provincially. Through these commitments, we’re not only expanding the future nursing capacity in the province, but creating pathways to incredibly rewarding, long-term and family-supporting careers.

“On behalf of the provincial government, we thank the nurses who provide and continue to provide the best care possible for their patients. And I encourage people everywhere in the province to take a moment this week to recognize what all nurses have done and continue to do for us all.”

 When someone smiled at me today,
 I started smiling too
 I walk around the corner,

 When he smiled I realized,
 I'd passed it on to him
 I thought about the smile,

How to start a vegetable garden

Do you want to build a garden to enjoy fresh fruits and vegetables in your backyard? Whether you're starting from scratch or have some experience, here are a few tips to help make your project a success.

Choose a suitable location Choose a spot in your yard that receives direct sunlight all day. Ensure the area is far away from the roots of mature trees, so your plants have plenty of space to thrive. If you want to protect your plants from the wind, choose an area against a hedge or fence.

Determine the size Your garden must be large enough to grow all the fruits and veggies you and your family love. Therefore, consider how many people will be enjoying the freshly harvested goods. Additionally, determine whether you want to rely solely on your garden for vegetables or supplement your harvest with produce from the grocery store. If you have an in-ground garden, allow for enough space to move between rows. If you have a raised bed, make sure you can reach each plant from the outside.

Use the right products If you plan on starting an in-ground garden, add compost to the soil to provide adequate nutrients for your plants. If you prefer a raised bed, make sure to construct it from materials that won't rot, such as wood composite, stone or steel. Then, fill the bed with high-quality potting soil and add fertilizer as necessary.

Plant the right crops Start with easy-to-grow plants like Swiss chard, kale, lettuce, beets, peas and beans. If this is your first garden, these plants are great because they produce good yields and require minimal attention. Ensure each crop has enough room to grow and is located next to a companion plant to improve growth.

Visit your local gardening store to get the equipment you need to start your garden and receive personalized advice.
